One of the best series on TV at the moment is Penguin Island on Tuesday evenings at 7.30. Next Tuesday will be the last one. If you didn't see the first five programmes, you can still watch them online, but hurry! It's a brilliant series about Phillip Island, an island off the coast of Australia which is home to thousands of Little Penguins. These penguins are very small - the smallest in the world and they make their homes and lay their eggs a few hundred metres from the beach. Every day the adult penguins go to sea and swim hundreds of miles to find fish. Then they bring it back for their babies (called chicks) every night.

These penguins only live in one or two places in Australia and New Zealand so it is very important to protect them. A few years ago, there were holiday houses for Australians on the island which were too close to the penguins. So the government started a penguin protection plan - they bought all the houses and then knocked them down.

Now people can come to the island, watch the penguins on the beach and hopefully want to help them. When the penguins return with their food, they have to walk the few hundred metres to their homes. This walk is called the Penguin Parade! So, people can still enjoy watching the penguins, but they don't live close to them anymore. In the last programme we will learn about Tilda, a young female chick. Will her parents come back with food or will she have to go and swim for the first time to find some? Watch on Tuesday to see what happens. I love this programme and I'm sure you will, too!

The tabloid newspaper

Tabloid journalism is a (13)style of reporting that takes its name from the compact size of the newspaper, which is about half the size of traditional newspapers. However, not every newspaper printed in this format can be called tabloid, since its content and style are very different.

So, what are tabloid content and style? In 1900, Joseph Pulitzer, publisher of the New York World, invited the founder of a well-known newspaper in London, Alfred Harmsworth, to edit the New York World for one day. Harmsworth's version of The World, which came (14)on January 1, 1901, was half the size of the paper's traditional format and received a big reaction from its readers. However, it was not just the size of the newspaper that was smaller but also the reduced amount of printing space, which contained shorter stories with less complex sentences. In 1903, Harmsworth started The Daily Mirror in London, the first modern tabloid newspaper. It was attractive to a (15)audience and printed more photographs than any other newspaper of the time. By 1909, it was selling a million copies per day – far more than any other newspaper at the time.

By the late 20th and early 21st centuries, the British press was dominated by tabloids, with five national daily newspapers having a combined circulation of approximately ten million. (16) their focus was mainly on entertainment rather than news or political issues, these papers remained an important source for the general public's opinion.
